NEW YORK POLITICS

The whirligig of time revolves even less rapidly than that of politics, and people who have reasonably good memories must be surprised to find a politician who only a few years ago was notorious for unscrupulous wire-pulling in behalf of the old Tammany Ring now heralded and lauded as a great exponent of public integrity and political purity. We allude to Samuel J. Tilden, now Democratic Governor and candidate for re-election in New York and formerly known as Boss Tweed's political manager and Chairman of the Democratic State Committee. Those who have memories have not forgotten that it was the policy of the Ring robbers to be politically represented by some plausible and respectable person who could amuse the people and make high-toned speeches, while the rascals behind were emptying the public treasury. For this purpose John T. Hoffman was made the special protege of Tweed and his confreres and he was kept before the public as Tammany's most young man, first as Recorder then Mayor of New York city and then Governor of the State. How useful he was to the Ring in these positions, the history of his administration has shown. The power of Tweed depended on the control of the Courts and influence with the Legislature and these aids were secured through the subservicency of Tammany's Governor. The political control of the State was thus the first requisite for the Ring and year after year the most monstrous frauds were perpetrated in the city to overcome the Republican majority in the state.

In this part of the work our present political reformer, Samuel J. Tilden bore a conspicuous part. In 1868 the people had become restless under the obnoxious rule of Tammany and determined to throw off the yoke. The contest was made between Hon. John A. Griswold, the Republican candidate for Governor and Hoffman the pet of the Ring. The campaign against the Tweed ring men was vigorously prosecuted and the public thoroughly aroused. As the day of election approached it became evident that without an enormous fraudulent vote in the city Hoffman would dismally be defeated. Tweed and his confederates were thoroughly alarmed and set about organizing their forces of repeaters and ballot stuffers with the boldness of desperation. Tilden was then Chairman of the Democratic State Committee and chief political manager for the ring. He was alike unscrupulous and unscrupulous in planning a million of fraudulent votes and his method of working is indicated by the following secret circular which he sent out to his political agents in each county just before the election.

ROOMS OF THE DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE, October 27 1868.

My Dear Sir—Please at once to communicate to me some reliable person in three of your principal towns and in each city of your county and request him to report to me through you or direct and to telegraph to WILLIAM M. TWEED, Tammany Hall, the moment the business of the polls and counting of the vote with persons outside of the state. Let the telegraph be as follows: This town will show a Democratic gain or loss of over last year of—(number) or this one if sufficiently certain. This town will give a Republican or Democratic majority of—. There is no other message or object to be attempted by us and anyone transmitting at the hour of closing the polls but no longer waiting. Opportunity must be taken of the usual half hour lull in telegraphic communication over lines before actual results begin to be collected and before the Associated Press and the telegraph with return is all in a flutter with individual messages, and give correct to within actually the count.

Yours truly yours,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
Chairman.

The writer of the article was in New York at the time and well remembers the vigorous execration with which Horace Greeley thunderized the above circular. The author in the Tribune which had I cannot possess of a copy. On the morning of the election the streets in front of the newspaper offices were densely thronged with people eagerly scanning the bulletins from all parts of the state and the returns of heavy Republican majorities but hour after hour bulletins unknown I get no report of the city vote could be obtained. If our memory is at fault the next morning papers were equally unable to report the city vote which should have been returned to the Police Commissioners to be canvassed early in the evening after the closing of the polls. We believe that it was not until the afternoon of the next day that the canvassers were enabled to declare the full vote. The returns from several of the worst wards having been kept somewhere in secret during the night. When the vote was declared it appeared that the responses to the secret circulars appointed the Tammany managers that Griswold would come to the city with over forty thousand majority and that the city vote which had been held back had been packed full enough to overcome this heavy odds. Griswold's majority outside of the city was 41,204 and to overcome it Tammany stuffed the city ballot boxes with a vote larger by nearly 40,000 than had been cast in 1867, the count showing 1,12 for Griswold and no less than 112,— for Hoffman giving the latter a majority of 62,146 in the city alone which wiped out the honest country majority of over 41,000 and gave Hoffman a nominal majority of 27,946.

The perpetration of enormous frauds in the city was afterwards conclusively shown and the fact has long since ceased to be a matter of dispute. The issuing of thousands of fraudulent naturalization papers in blank to the Democratic committemen was fully exposed; intimidation and outrage at the polls was systematically carried on by gangs of Tammany roughs, the money stolen by the ring was used without stint, ballot-boxes were openly tampered with and in the midst of this riot of corruption, Samuel J. Tilpen acted as general-in-chief of the political forces and employed all his strategy and cunning in riveting afresh upon the limbs of the people the shackles forged by his more conspicuous associate William M. Tweed.

It is also notorious that when the N. Y. Times began its bold assaults upon the Ring Tilden and other leading Democratic politicians were ready and eager in their defense of the Boss, and it was not until Tweed was clocking in the grasp of a thoroughly aroused public sentiment, and the overthrow of the cabal complete, that the wily politician deemed it prudent to turn upon his fallen companions and seek to win applause as a Reformer by employing the knowledge gained in their counsels to trace the distribution of the spoils. The honest public, hastily ready to credit his own ability to crush out the powerful junta of villains who had so long held undisputed sway, eagerly welcomed the aid of a prominent Tammany Democrat, and ignored his past affiliations while commending his later zeal. It was thus that Samuel J. Tilden appeared upon the stage as a Reformer, and one can imagine Tweed sending forth from his prison bars the cry of "Et tu Brute!" as he found his former boon companion claiming the leadership of the anti-Ring crusade and elevating himself as an exponent of civic virtue upon the ruins of the conspiracy in which he had borne a willing and important part.

The reorganization of Tammany under a new "Boss" and with methods and designs as unscrupulous as those of Tweed et als has already begun and John Kelly, with Tilden's assistance and approval is carrying out the programme with a high hand. The debauching of the courts is first aimed at, and hence Tammany has declared war upon Recorder Hackett and County Attorney Phelps, who are troublesome in dealing with rascality, and the "Boss" has prepared a schedule of Police Justices to be elected to do his bidding. As the Police Commissioners have the canvassing of the city vote, it has been deemed necessary by the new Ring to get rid of the present incumbents and the Mayor is already taking measures to install men of kindly selection in time to handle the ballots in November. In the meantime Gov. Tilden travels about the State doing the highly respectable making pretty speeches about canal reform and the burdens of taxation, and causing the widest publication of a high-toned circular against election frauds. It is the same old game and Tweed must chuckle in Ludlow street jail, to note how the men who clambered into favor upon his downfall are using his old tactics in fooling the public. If the people of the Empire State put themselves again under the yoke of Tammany after having once escaped it will be their own fault and they can expect little sympathy from the sensible men of the country at large.

GOV ALLEN'S LOAD

Our contemporary will be shocked to learn that the N. Y. Herald copies the following report of an interview of a correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial with Gov. Allen at Chillicothe after election.

After it was all over and Governor Hayes surely elected I felt it my duty as a true friend to call on His Excellency, and, if necessary express my sympathy for his loss. Arrived at the mansion I was met at the door by his son-in-law Dr. Scott who at once ushered me into the presence of the Governor, who received me with that same genuine old Virginia courtesy for which he is famed. I opened with Well, Governor, by the way you look I guess you read all right. you are not crying over spilt milk. I should judge."

Well, my friend I am not. I never felt more jolly in my life. Now I am going to make an observation straight from my heart. I want you newspaper men to believe me. I give you my word as an honest and honorable man personally I did not care a bubbee for the office. Of course I feel for my party.

This the Governor said with a cheery laugh and without the least shadow of regret or winning.

Governor to what do you attribute your defeat?

"Oh I don't know—God only knows that I had a d—l of a load to carry there's no doubt of that. I'd rather not say what it was just now."

Don't you think Governor, that general Gary had something to do with it.

Now look here don't you lead me in to say anything against Sam. You editor he about played sam already and what's the use of getting after the poor d—l any more?

Well I don't know Governor, but sam is such a terrible cuss that it hard to keep one's hands off of him?

Well well—let him go Cover him with the mantle of charity.

But you see Governor that can't be done—there's no mantle large enough to cover the fellow—he'd slip out somehow at least some party he thought had the most votes.

"Well, Governor, I don't want to bore you. Have you any objection to discussing your defeat any further?

Well I don't care to say any more on the subject. You can just say that I am fully satisfied with the verdict of the people and congratulate the Republicans on its luck in electing so good a man as General Hayes. Come take a glass of wine with me.

With that the interview ceased and the old Governor settled himself down in his chair seemingly content to resume his journey with the literature of the past and present ages of the world.

The luck story was certainly rich and but the Governor didn't seem inclined to talk the subject so I was not pressed. On taking our leave the old Governor insisted on following us out to the hotel and seeing us off he hallooed after us to come to Hallstead to come up here and take a glass of wine with me.

The Tribune also copies the following editorial opinion of the Cincinnati paper as to what constituted the Governor's load.

We think we could tell what the load was that Governor Allen speaks of that he carried through the late contest. Our correspondent who interviewed the Governor thought he meant Sam Cary. Well, the Governor did not mean Sam Cary. The cry baby was the load. The Governor was persuaded to lend the weight of his personal character as an honest man and of his public character as a Hard-Money statesman to the contemptible money programme. He was no doubt promised as many things as the devil tempted Christ the Savior with and upon conditions not wholly unlike those that Satan sought to prescribe when he was on a high mountain. The Governor was told that the Republicans had inflicted the evil of currency upon the country, and all the Democrats had to do was to take advantage of their wrong. This was an illusion, and when the old Governor accepted the task of popularizing the ring baby it proved to be a dreadful load."

NEW MAGAZINES.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY for November makes a brilliant opening with the first two chapters of Mr Howells' new novel "Private Theatricals" the scenery and persons of which are distinctly American and very striking. This is followed by Charles Dudley Warner's At the Gates of the East," a travel-sketch, fresh and full of color in which sentiment and keen fun are charmingly blended. Useful information finds a worthy exponent in Colonel Waring's final paper on "Sanitary Drainage," and this is followed by the eleventh chapter of Mr James' Roderick Hudson." Charles Francis Adams Jr., begins his long-expected series of articles on railroads, with an interesting account of some great railroad accidents. Mrs Kemble's "Old Woman's Gossip," continues its unfailing supply of curious anecdote, and George Cary Eggleston takes us into the region of historic reminiscence in his account of life in the Old Dominion. The literary essay of the number treats of Hans Christian Anderson's short stories, and is by Horace E. Scudder, the American translator of Anderson. Besides these contributions, there are poems by T. B. Aldrich, Mrs Thaxter, Edgar Fawcett, and G. P. Lathrop; and the departments of Music and Education are entertaining as well as instructive. H. O. Houghton & Co., Boston, and Hurd & Houghton, New York, Publishers.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, filled with an abundance of short stories, scientific and biographic sketches, poems and chit chats, is calculated to please the tastes of the people. It is an entertaining and instructive miscellany, prized in the, next in typography and a welcome guest in the family. John G. Harkness, Publisher, Wilmington, Delaware.

POLITICAL AND PERSONAL

During the present year the Republicans have carried Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, North Carolina, Michigan, Ohio, Iowa and Nebraska. The Democrats have carried Connecticut, California, Kentucky and Alabama. Of the twelve States that have held elections this year, it is thus seen that the Republicans have carried eight and the Democrats four.

One of the frankest comments made by a disgusted Democratic journal the morning after the Ohio election was the following from the Macon Telegraph and Messenger. "As we have been fearing for some days, Democracy has gone to the devil with a rush, and Radicalism is more alive right now than it has been any day in eighteen months. The defeat of the Democracy has brought the White House once more in sight of the Jacobins. Of all the imbecile, jackassical, fat-witted performances, this heads the procession."

The Pennsylvania correspondent of the New York Times—the same who went through the Ohio campaign—says that one result of the latter has been to compel the Democracy to keep quiet on the inflation issue. He says the information received by the Republican Committee is most encouraging. It inspires confidence in the conclusion that Hartranft will have a majority of thirty or forty thousand.

The Providence Journal makes the following geographical or hydrographical comparison

"If we compare to-day the two parties as they display their disposition where they are respectively in the majority, we shall see that though the Democratic party like the Missouri river discharges a vast amount of turbid matter, the Republican party like the Mississippi, at last neutralizes and overcomes."

Gov Allen being asked on the night of his defeat what he attributed it to, said "Oh I don't know. I had a d—l of a load to carry, there's no doubt of that. I'd rather not say what it was just now."

The complexion of the Ohio Legislature is finally settled. It stands this

SENATE.
Republicans	21
Democrats	16
Republican majority	5
HOUSE.
Republicans	58
Democrats	39
Republican majority	19

The majority for Hayes in the State is 5057 if the fraudulent vote in Perrysburg be rejected, but if it be counted his majority is 4763. Sam Carey, the head-centre of the nationalists is beaten for Lieutenant Governor about 12,000.

THE MISSING AUGUSTA GIRL. The Kennebec Journal of Thursday has the following

Mr Joseph W. Clapp received a letter yesterday from Mr Hatch of Richmond stating that a girl resembling the missing girl was seen walking on the railroad track in that town, on Friday evening last. A telegram was at once sent for particulars but at this hour (noon) no answer has come of the girl had nothing to do with the mystery. The dress of the girl described does not agree with the dress worn by Miss Clapp.

The City Marshal has received a letter from Warren Worcester county, Mass., asking for a full description of the girl, and requesting that the information be kept out of the newspapers. The writer says he has a friend who is interested in the matter, and that the name is not Carrie. The City Marshal sent on a full description by the night train. The State street theory is exploded by a gentleman coming forward and saying he took a lady into his carriage in front of the Universalist church, at the hour designated on Thursday evening.

Reliable Evidence.
MR. H. R. STEVENS
Dear Sir—I will most cheerfully add my testimony to the great number you have already received in favor of your great and good medicine, VEGETINE. For I do not think enough can be paid for its praise, for it was troubled over thirty years with that dreadful disease, Catarrh, and had such hard coughing spells that it would seem as though I could never breathe any more, and VEGETINE has cured me. And I do feel as though I did all the time there is so good a medicine as VEGETINE, and I always think it one of the best medicines for coughs and colds, sinking feelings at the stomach, and advise everybody to take the VEGETINE, for I can assure them it is one of the best medicines that ever was.

VALUABLE INFORMATION.
BOSTON, Dec. 19, 1869
Gentlemen—My only object in giving you this testimonial is to spread valuable information. Having been badly afflicted with Salt Rheum, and the whole surface of my skin being covered with pimples and eruptions, many of which caused me great pain and anxiety, and knowing it to be a blood disease I took many of the advertised blood preparations, among which was any quantity of Sarsaparilla, without obtaining any benefit until I commenced taking the VEGETINE, and before I had completed the first bottle I saw that I was on the right medicine. Consequently, I followed up the VEGETINE for seven months, when I was pronounced a well man, and my skin is now as smooth as ivory free from pimples and eruptions. I have never enjoyed so good health, and I cheerfully recommend it to the use of Vegetine, to all persons afflicted with Rheumatism, Humors, Ulcers, Salt Rheum and other complaints, for I know it to be the best medicine for purifying the blood.

A Sad and Fatal Accident.

CONCORD, Oct. 21. A terrible accident occurred here yesterday afternoon, resulting in the death of Mr Frederick Hudson, one of the most valuable citizens of this town. About quarter past five o'clock he was approaching the Monument street crossing of the Middlesex Centre railroad in a buggy with Judge John S. Kayes. The flagman warned them of the approach of a train and they stopped long enough to let the engine pass, but not thinking that a flying switch was always made at there and that the cars were following they started to cross as soon as the engine had passed, and the wheel was struck by the cars, throwing Judge Kayes into the street and rolled Mr. Hudson inside the buggy along the track twenty feet. Judge Kayes was not seriously injured. Everything was tried for Mr. Hudson, but in vain, and he died this morning at 5 o'clock. He was for a long time well known as one of the editors of the New York Herald, and was the author of a History of journalism, published a short time ago. A Gigantic Treasury Fraud Discovered

PHILADELPHIA, Oct 21. The committee appointed by the Pennsylvania House of Representatives to invest gate the affairs of the Treasury, have agreed on a report stating that their investigations have developed the following facts: That from 1864 to 1874 there appears to be a yearly overcharge on the interest account on the public debt, the different treasurers taking credit for paying more interest than the State debt bore. The grand aggregate thus unlawfully taken from the State treasury in ten years would aggregate the enormous sum of $1,153,301.65.

Second, that from 1870 to 74 there appears to have been an excess of premium charged to pay interest on gold bearing bonds amounting to $131,427.95. Many other minor fraudulent transactions came under the notice of the Committee, but those here mentioned are the most important. On referring to the action of the ex-Treasurers in refusing to appear before the Committee, the report says:

The omission is very justly supplied in the following note:

In the choruses and music, her accompaniments were prominently noticed, in accordance with the nature of the music, or of the sentiment of the words; exactly in time and to good music. BRITANNIA CLIPPERS.

To the Admiralty Circular, of July 21, to captains of H. M.'s ships, on the subject of Fugitive Slaves.

"Eh! what" cries Britannia, rubbing her eyes,
With a look of excellently affected surprise,
"Do you imagine my slaves Under Instructions?"
I thought I had settled this little dispute,
A pretty position, my lords, I declare!
Will I don't care a cent, or countenance set anywhere
To this course of naval prohibitions.

"My will, I conceived, was made clear to the world,
That, wherever my Union Jack was unfurled,
The slave should find freedom thereunder.
That's a fair and a square rule which all quibbles should quell,
But, as for my roundabouts "Circular,"—well,
It would tax a Sir Lawyer its meanings to tell,
One thing, though, is plain—it's a blunder!

"No need for tall talk about ruling the waves,
But, at least, my 'broad rule' does not recognize slaves,
Whether stretched on green land or blue ocean.
A legal red serf on a free British ship
Is a new conception not easy to grasp,
Received the chains he has managed to slip?
I rather rebel at the notion!

"With plate-slicing powers my red-dogs and I
Will find it a stiff work to keep them—I try.
We shall find 'em in scores, and they hate us
Of I fancy I see a committee of Jacks
On a fugitive wretch coolly turning their backs,
Or hold up my shore-going sailors quakes,
With a view to 'determine his status'!

"My ships may not court the poor runaway thrall,
But, if once he's on board, upon Britons to call
Their prey to the sharks to surrender,
I guess is coming it rather too strong,
Remote to the claims of the cheeks and thong,
And to rights which are based on the blackest of wrong,
One may be just a trifle too tender.

"Let them look to their 'chattels' my craft were not made
To play any part in the slave-catching trade,
I have a spirit about me and bullion to back it.
My stamp has been taken, and it should lead
To some trifle of trouble,—as well may succeed
When honest legal counters villainous greed—
It is not my intention to shirk it.

"No, my Lords, your quickness is thoughtful and kind,
I regret the result is not more to my mind
When you gave my slit rule a new raising.
I might be considered, At present I hold
That your course in the case is a little too bold,
You had better hark back, for your counsels are cold,
And your glasses obscure and misleading.

"What philanthropists fought for, and legists con-ferred,
Shall not be yielded by wrangle and squirm.
No quibble, or polite uttering,
My law is writ large for all stations to see—
Subjects or aliens, 'Wealth my flag all are free!'
That's a very plain rule, and you'll reckon with me
If you think it requires any altering!

JEANNE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "PATTEY."

"Was there ever a child so awkward and so stupid by! Get along with thee Jeanne, and carry the pitcher steadily, or thou will certainly break it to pieces."

There is such a peculiar tone in the voice, such a ring of sadness in its utterance, that I stand still and look round to find the speaker.

I had been walking beside the lovely River Vire, with its lovely cascade foaming over huge gray stones, bordered by dyeing-houses with long stretches of blue cloth hanging on poles beteen the houses, or soaking in tubs in front.

But the sun blazed fiercely overhead, and the glitter of the bright dancing river tired my eyes. I turned gladly into a by-street on the left, which I hoped would take me home ward.

A very narrow, steep street, leading down, I felt sure, into the very heart of the charming town of Vire. On each side of the way were quaint houses, some built of stone with curious carving about the dormer windows, others covered with wooden tiles, laid one over another like fish-scales, moss-grown, blackened, and uneven with age and decay.

One of these tiled houses on my righthad bright blossoms of fuchsia and nasturtium showing through the clustering vine-leaves that clung round its upper windows, while, lower down, just above the shop-door, two or three bunches of haricot beans hung drying of an exquisite rosy hue. There is no one in the open shop—a broker's—and I glance across the way.

A tall girl of fifteen or so is coming out of a side door; she stoops, and she has a large-boned ungainly figure; she is bareheaded, and big matted brown hair looks rough and coarse. Clean but very unattractive in appearance as she stumps along with huge, shabby black sabots on her stockingless feet.

She walks quickly on, looking fixedly on the ground, and holding a great red pitcher with both hands; but there is no nimbleness in her gait; she moves one large foot after another as if she found them heavy to drag along.

"Ah, but she is malagroite. Mon Dieu! what will become of the unhappy one?"

The harsh voice came from so near to me that I started. I rose by the door from which the girl had come was a large open window, and in the middle of the square dark space revealed within sat an old woman with a very red and wrinkled face; her little bleared eyes were no bigger than pig's; a white stocking-cap came down nearly to her hairless eyebrows; she had on a faded russy brown gown, a blue neck-handkerchief over her shoulders. She was sitting before a spinning-wheel, but she was not spinning, she looked at the wheel, but she held her distaff idly in one hand and supported her chin with the other. The hands showed little purple knots through the hard brown skin.

I looked up at the house. It was very small and narrow, its clinging vine-leaves and gay flowers masked the incumbering crooked beams and dirty, blackened hue of the scaly front. The gable seemed ready to topple over into the street below, and the lattice window was so incrusted with cobwebs that it could not have been opened for months.

I looked again at the old woman; she was rocking herself backward and forward in mourning, as if in pain.

"Bon jour, Madame," I said, rather timidly, for the red face had a scowl on it, and I knew how harsh the voice was. She left off rocking, turned her head slowly, and fixed the little dully red eyes on me.

"It is never bon jour to me!" she said harshly. "You are not of Vire, that is plain, every house knows that I can never have a good day."

There was again that sad, desparing ring in her voice.

"I am very sorry," I said, feeling guilty. "What is your trouble, my poor woman?"

"You say, 'my poor woman!'" she blinked her little red eyes at me till I felt nervous as well as guilty, this was the first and last French woman I had met with, and also the first of her class who did not address me as Madame—"and you say you are sorry. I am poor indeed. You are like all those who live in sunshine—you talk and you do not know the meaning of your words. How can you be sorry? you have nothing to be sorry for, and, mon Dieu! what do you know about me?"

I tried to speak, but she went with almost fierce vehemence:

"You have health, and strength, and clothes, and plenty to eat; what do I know, sitting here in this dark corner! you have, perhaps, money; and a husband and children; mon Dieu! what cause have you to be sorry?"

Her little eyes looked very angry, and ugly too, as she strained them upward to my face.

"I—I mean I am sorry for you." I said this with the idea of making an ingenious change of mode, and then became painfully conscious of failure. She actually scowled at me, and turning away began to spin with foot and hand alap.

I stood watching her. I did not know what to say next. A cloud of gnats that had followed me from the river took advantage of the silence to sound a shrill chorus in my ears.

Presently three o'clock chimed loudly from the clock tower—the grosse horloge of Vire—and I remembered that my cousin Jeanne was waiting for me at the inn to go in search of Olivier Rassalin. However, I must satisfy my curiosity about this poor woman.

"I beg your pardon," said this very meekly, "but I take an interest in people who suffer, and I fear you have suffered very much. Is that young girl who has just gone away with a pitcher your daughter?"

She did not answer; she began to frown again, and then a large tear rolled over her red, wrinkled face; she tried to gulp it down, but another and another followed

"Your husband is dead, then?" She frown came back for a moment.

"Yes, Madame, he has been dead twenty years and more; and I am cursed to be alone, for my Louis was a soldier long before this war; but I could work, then, and when one works there is not time to think. I could sew and make lace too."

"But you are working now." I tried to look into the room, doubly dark by the total absence of sunshine in the narrow street and from the blackened walls inside. The room was very bare. On one side was a tiny stove, and upon it an earthern stew-pan; close by was a small heap of chopped fagots. There was a chair without a back, and behind the old woman was a dark bedstead with a dingy quilt. It was all miserably poor and squalid.

"But no, madame," she shook her head, "this is not work, this is only bread. Since this was paralyzed," she touched her left thumb, "I can no longer make the lace work or the embroidery. There is the risk of spoiling the work, and the risk is too great. Even if I could do it, I can no longer go to seek it. From here"—she touched her left hip—"I am useless. The spinning"—she frowned at the distaff—"makes bread for the girl and me. Ah! I must earn bread. She eats"—she began to rock backward and forward again. "Mon Dieu! she eats like a regiment."

"She is your servant?" I put the question doubtfully, for it seemed surprising this poor old woman could afford to keep any one but herself.

"Sire St Jeanne—that is all!"

I wished I had not been so inquisitive, for the cloud came over her face again. I was standing sideways, and I saw the broken appear in the shop opposite, and then come forward and lean against his door-post, ready to listen, while he smoked his pipe.

"I took her from the hospice," the old woman went on and her voice had got back all its former harshness. "I had enough for two then; she is better than no one, and perhaps no one else would keep so awkward a child. She is fated to do mischief. Over and over again she could have filled her stomach with the pitchers and pipkins she has broken. One day she falls, and the next she breaks. She grows worse and worse. Not even does she look like another girl." She gave a heavy sigh and pointed her distaff at the chair; the back lay on the ground beside it. "She threw that down just now, and there—"

The whole scene—the dark, dingy room, where everything was shrouded in a mystery of gloom—the ancient spinning-wheel—the witch-like figure and face of the old woman, her white cotton cap and red face telling out intensely against the black back ground—seemed more like a bit of middle age dream than a reality; and when she pointed that weird-looking distaff at the broken chair I almost expected to see it transformed into a hob-goblin.

I recovered from my dream to find the red eyes scanning my face, as if they were impatient for an answer.

"But the chair can be mended," I said.

"No, no; she shook her head hopelessly. "Jeanne could never mend anything. She can only break and destroy, and I have no sous to spend on mending."

I thought I would go and find Jeanne, and see if anything could be done.

"Well, au revoir, Madame," I said, "I hope to stay in Vire till to-morrow, and perhaps we may meet again." I will now go and see what Jeanne is about."

She took no further notice of me or of my salutation, but went on spinning.

II.

I guessed that I should come out on the Place beside the great fountain, and a few yards further on a turn, and then a descent of some old broken stone steps brought me facing the fountain.

The huge square water-trough is raised several feet above the Place, and here in a constant supply of fresh water for the busy maids and matrons of Vire. In front of the fountain, and partly hiding my view of it, was a very pordy dame. Her broad, square shoulders were covered by a red neckerchief, and on her head she wore a steeple-crowned white cap, with a pair of flaxen muslin wings at the ears; the pointed part of the headpiece lined with sky-blue silk. She recognized me at once as a stranger.

"Good day," she said as I got by. "Madame has been examining our town. Ah! it is a fine old town for strangers; but those houses are better to look at than to live in."

"Yes, Madame, it is a charming town" and then I asked her if she had seen a tall girl come just now and fill a red pitcher at the fountain.

She smiled. "Madame will see a great many girls come to the fountain to fill red pitchers." But as she spoke she moved aside and I saw a girl seated on the step that goes round the fountain; her great red bands were spread over her face, but by the rough head and the large stockingless feet I recognized Jeanne, the unlucky.

She seemed to be sobbing, and I began to wonder if she was still crying about the broken chair; but almost as the thought came I saw a heap of red fragments beside her, and I guessed that the long pitcher had followed in the long train of its predecessors. Can it be carelessness or awkwardness, or both united, which make the misery of her life?

The owner of the tall cap gave me a friendly smile.

"Poor child," she nodded her head toward Jeanne. "There was never such a malagroite since the beginning of the world; and now she has broken the only pitcher of la vieve Robillard. Ah, Mon Dieu! she is unfortunate! The poor child! Bon soir, Madame;" and, giving me a smiling nod, she departed.

Jeanne sat crouched up, her coarse hands plunged into her tangle of dull brown hair. She looked a kind of female Caliban.

"Jeanne," I said, "what is the matter?"

She looked up; she had smeared her tears over her cheeks till they were soiled and sodden, her eyelids were red and swollen, and so was her nose; but the face was a good honest face, and her great, dark eyes were full of feeling and intelligence. The sort of disgust I had began to feel vanished.

"Get up, my child, and tell me how you broke your pitcher."

She got up slowly, I saw her awkward she was in every movement. So tall and unformed, and with such unshapely hands and feet at the end of her long thin arms and legs. Her dark stuff gown clung closely to her, and she did not wear a neckerchief to hide her hollow chest and round sloping shoulders; and yet, except her newly tear-smeared cheeks, Jeanne looked clean and wholesome.

She glanced at me, and then at the heap of red fragments, and I saw her face puckering into fresh misery.

"Do not cry any more, my girl," I said, abruptly, for the quivering lips and sad face gave me an uncomfortable feeling in my throat. "You shall have a new pitcher."

Jeanne looked at me with fresh sudden wonder in her eyes that I began to laugh. This did her good; a genuine smile spread over her face and beautified it while it lasted.

"I do not know what to say to you, Jeanne; you are terrible; you will certainly break yourself some day if you go on like this."

"Yes, Madame," she curtseied; "that is just what Madame Robillard has said."

At this I laughed again, but Jeanne sighed a heavy, bursting sigh.

"Does not Madame think it will be better that I should break myself than always the pitchers of Madame Robillard—of the poor Madame, who has no money now to buy new ones?"

I did not feel able to answer this question, so I said, "Have you got any parents, Jeanne?"

She shook her head.

"No, Madame, they died before I can remember. I am from the hospice. I was given to a mistress when I was old enough."

"Who gave you?"

It seemed to me, like that the human being with a quick feeling soul, should say she did not belong to herself, but could be given away like a dumb brute.

"The Sisters, Madame, they were so good, it was long before they knew I was unhappy, and when some one old them, they took me away and gave me to Madame Robillard."

"Ah, that, you had another situation and

LIFE IN A PILL-BOX!

PARSONS' PURGATIVE PILLS

THE GREAT ANTI-BILIOUS REMEDY.

ONE OR TWO IS A DOSE.
ONLY 25 CTS. A BOX.

IT IS A WELL-KNOWN FACT that a large proportion of diseases begin in the DERANGEMENT OF THE STOMACH, LIVER AND BOWELS.

The Stomach is the great centre which influences the health or disease of the system; abused by excess,

Indigestion, Giddiness, Prostration,

Are the natural results. The Liver becomes affected, hence we have

BILIOUS TROUBLES.

The Bowels are deranged, occasioning

Costiveness, Piles, Heartburn, Diarrhœa, Dysentery.

A necessity has long been felt by physicians and families for

A SAFE AND RELIABLE ANTI-BILIOUS PILL,

Something that would be safe to administer and could be relied on in all cases where a cathartic was required. To meet this demand,

PARSONS' PURGATIVE PILLS

Were compounded, every property of which has been carefully analyzed by scientific investigation, and are believed to be the

SAFEST, SUREST & MOST RELIABLE FAMILY PILL IN THE WORLD.

PARSONS' PURGATIVE PILLS

Are composed of cathartics used and approved by all medical practitioners. They do not require the patient to take from six to a dozen, as do most others, but one or two of PARSONS' PILLS, taken as directed, are sufficient (except in extreme cases) to cure

Dyspepsia, Nervous Debility, Headache, Oppression after Eating, Piles, Heartburn, Furred Tongue, Distention of the Stomach and Bowels, Dizziness, Sick Headache, Loss of Appetite, Pain in the Back or Side, Inflammation of the Kidneys, &c., &c.

IN THE SPRING OF THE YEAR

ARE INDISPENSABLE TO INVIGORATE AND GIVE TONE TO THE SYSTEM.

BY TAKING

PARSONS' PURGATIVE PILLS

This fact will be believed with

New Life, Health and Regularity.

The liver and bowel will be quickened and strengthened, so discharge their functions, and the bowels regulated. They do not make the weak weaker, but give

Strength and Vigor

TO THE PERSON WHO USES THEM.
